80.5: Palma Ciea Park

A small, undeveloped site in the middle of the city of Keizer. A small, grassy bench overlook could make a good lunch stop.

RM 79.5: Navigation Hazards
Watch for rocks, swift current and occasional strong eddy lines.

81.25: Sunset Park

(City of Keizer)
This small park has a grassy bench that looks out toward the river. The park is nestled among the suburban riverside residences of Keizer. (Possible launch, although only street parking)

79.5: Keizer Rapids Park

This park is worth a stop. The City of Keizer leased it from OPRD and is in the process of developing the site. Currently there is a nice campsite with a picnic table, fire ring, and seasonal restroom. As the park is developed and more people visit, the campsite may be moved downstream to provide some level of solitude. The upland portion of the park has a stand of second-growth forest that nestles against the cottonwoods and willows on the gravel bar at the river's edge. A new boat ramp and dock are slated for the area just above the current Water Trail campsite. Hopefully, in time the park will provide a mix of uses yet preserve the large natural area next to the river. (Currently: campsite with restroom, fire ring, picnic tables overlooking a nice eddy. When constructed: parking, restrooms, water and more)

82: River's Edge Park, City of Keizer

This city park is an undeveloped greenway. In recent years, local authorities have come to believe that this was once the site of Wallace House, an 1810 fur trading post temporarily constructed by a contingent of the Astor Party sent up the Willamette to search for food and fur. While there is scant archaeological evidence, the site seems the best match for historical accounts.

83: McLane Island (OPRD)

This island provides relative quiet. Along the left channel is a small beach that can be used for camping. The island makes for a good lunch stop. (no amenities)
